Mission
The Department of Library Science and Technology through excellence in instruction, scholarship, and other creative activities, as well as service to the public, to the profession, and to the community provides professionals with the knowledge, skills, experiences, and dispositions necessary to serve a diverse population within Texas, across the country, and globally. The Department of Library Science and Technology also seeks to educate leaders who will transform learning.

Academic Programs
Undergraduates who are interested in becoming a school librarian must hold a teaching certificate, two years of teaching experience, and pursue a Master of Library Science. Those interested in becoming instructional technology professionals will need to pursue a Master of Education in Instructional Systems Design and Technology.

Highlights
• Nationally recognized school librarian preparation program
• Small class sizes provide the opportunity for close working relationships between faculty and students
