

MASTER OF ARTS IN HISTORY AND POLITICAL STUDIES

The Master of Arts in History and Political Studies is a fully online degree program designed for graduate students who have interdisciplinary interests and for educators who want to expand their professional credentials to teach courses in both history and government.

Requirements

The program entails 36 hours of coursework, split evenly between history and political science, and an interdisciplinary portfolio.

Coursework

All students are required to start with two introductory courses that provide an overview of the disciplines of history and political science as well as a grounding in each field's methodological approaches. Students are then required to take one course in each of the History Department's three thematic tracks (War & Violence, Rights & Identity, and Encounters & Exchanges) and the Political Science Department's three principal subfields (American Politics, Comparative Politics, and International Relations). Following those requirements, which account for twenty-four credit hours, students can choose any two other history courses and any two other political science courses as electives that best suit their professional objectives.

Thematic Tracks for History

- War & Violence: Courses examine how different societies have experienced, conducted, and remembered military conflict, mass killing, and genocide.
- Rights & Identity: Courses explore how individuals and collectives have defined themselves at different times and places around the world.
- Encounters & Exchanges: Courses explore how the world's diverse peoples have encountered and interacted with one another on a large scale over time.

Subfields for Political Science

- American Politics: Courses examine political institutions and political behavior in the United States.
- Comparative Politics: Courses explore the diverse political systems around the world.
- International Relations: Courses explore the cooperative and conflictual interactions of sovereign states and non-state actors on the global stage.

Portfolio

Students will submit an interdisciplinary portfolio in their final semester, reflecting their development and work in the program, and consisting of the following components:

- A synthetic essay that builds connections between history and political science courses and addresses a broader interdisciplinary question.
- Either an annotated bibliography of books and major articles read throughout the program, organized by course, OR a teaching portfolio consisting of a teaching statement that describes their philosophy, strategies, and objectives for teaching both history and political science courses; a draft syllabus for a course in history and a course in political science; and a sample of course materials.
- A compilation of written work from completed courses, such as research essays, book reviews, and response papers.

The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board (THECB) marketable skills initiative is part of the state's 60x30TX plan and was designed to help students articulate their skills to employers. Marketable skills are those skills valued by employers and/or graduate programs that can be applied in a variety of work or education settings and may include interpersonal, cognitive, and applied skill areas.

The MA in History and Political Studies is designed to provide graduates with the following marketable skills:

- Problem solving/research: critical, analytical, and evaluative thinking, while building an informed belief system by synthesizing knowledge and posing questions about different societies and cultures.
- Communication/presentation: professional expression of ideas through written, verbal, and visual work.
- Leadership/teaching: effective engagement in local, state, regional, national, and global communities while promoting civil discourse and civic participation.
